Attacking Force in Disorder.

"A strange scene was then witnessed Through the scattered woods and across the clearings streamed a loose and disordered mob of attackers, some of those in front, according to report, being dressed in the British uniform being dressed in the British uniform in order to put us off our guard and give time for the rest of their own men to come up. Suddenly our infantry lined their parapets and poured in a rapid fire from rifles and machine guns on the advancing crowd, who threw themselves flat on their faces. That, however, was the chance for our guns. They poured in a heavy shrapnel fire, and in a few moments the ground was strewn with dead and dying Germans all along in front of our parapets.

"Amid this scene of horror and confusion, out of the smoke and dust that hung in front of our trenches, suddening in front of our occasion the undertaking was equally hopeless, except for the assistance to be obtained from asphyxiating gas, which, as a matter of fact, failed.

Use of Gas Again Fails. "Another effort to drive us from our trenches by means of gas was made north of the Ypres-Connines canal. The Germans here had two batteries of cylinders placed so that their nozzles projected over the parapet, and for the space of half an hour a cloud of white gas spurted out. It was so dense that when standing in it a man could not see his hand when held in front of his face and its fumes bleached the grass and turned the sand bags of the parapets to a bright yellow cofor.

"No infantry attack was attempted, and although our trench had to be evacuated for a time, it was soon reoccupied. Our troops on the flanks kept up a rapid fire and prevented any advance on the enemy, part had such advance on the enemy's part, had such been his intention. But from the move-ments that could be observed in their lines it is probable the Germans suf-fered equally from the effects of the gas, and had to leave their own trench. gas, and had to leave their own trench.
"About this time a third attack took place north of the Menin road. In this case the enemy did for a time obtain lodgment in our trenches on the outskirts of Bellewarde woods, but was driven out by a counter attack.
"Thus another day of this prolonged battle had passed, and still our position was secure. The enemy's infantry were beginning to show signs of exhaustion, and the sight of the ground that lay between the hostile lines, littered more thickly every day with their comrades corpses, could hardly have been encouraging to the reinforcements brought up. None the less, they were not yet beaten.

The assault was not, however, delivered in this quarter, but as on the previous day, hurled against our trenches south of the Menin road, where three separate efforts were
